Russian Banya

In Russia, the healing effects of banya or sweat bathing have been recognized for centuries. As a well known and time honored therapeutic technique banya is a fundamental part of the Russian culture.

In simple terms, Russian banya is a wetter, more humid sauna experience than the dry sauna that is familiar to most. Banya entails repeated exposure to moist heat, massage with aromatic oils, and a brisk brushing of the bather's body with a leaf whisk to stimulate circulation and increase the heating effect, followed by a cool-down. As heat speeds up the chemical processes in the body, sweating becomes one of the simplest and most comfortable ways to rid the body of accumulated toxins.

The client comes into the room, lies down on a bench, and lets his or her body relax. The therapist pours water, to which a few drops of an essential oil is added over hot rocks to raise the heat in the room slowly and create steam until the client is perspiring.

As perspiration increases, the therapist shakes a warmed oak leaf whisk in the air to increase the heat in the room. When the client's perspiration is sufficient, the therapist uses the whisk to stroke, brush, and tap the client's body. This tapping brings the circulation up, enabling the heat to penetrate more deeply to relax muscle tissue and tendons. The tapping also massages the skin and removes dead skin cells. Traditionally, either an oak or birch whisk is used. Its leaves release phytoncides- a biologically active substance that kills or depresses the growth and development of pathogens. Essential oils released by venik improve metabolism and prevent premature aging of the skin. Enjoy a venik massage in our banya.
