History of Gilley's

The original Gilley's Saloon opened in Pasadena, Texas in 1971. At the time, it was the world's largest indoor bar and home to many popular country artists of the day including its owner, the legendary country crooner Mickey Gilley who achieved 39 top-ten hits during his career.

Mickey's musical achievements brought success to Gilley's Saloon as it also became a launching pad for up-and-coming country artists. Esquire Magazine included the bar in an article about the country music scene and sparked the interest of Hollywood.

In 1980, Paramount Pictures released the classic film "Urban Cowboy" in which Mickey and several friends played themselves helping the soundtrack skyrocket to number one on the Billboard chart. Gilley's Saloon became the most popular honky-tonk bar in the country until a fire closed its doors in 1990.

Nine years later, Gilley's Saloon found new life on the Las Vegas Strip at the New Frontier Hotel & Casino where it remained until the hotel was imploded in 2007.

The legend was once again resurrected as Gilley's Saloon, Dance Hall & Bar-B-Que here at Treasure Island in 2010...where the bull still bucks, the beer is still cold, and the girls are still dirty!
